Dear Harold,

We still haven't had winter yet, and there's nothing on the horizon. It will probably wait until April, I guess.

The first week of April is our spring break. I'm not sure if Toms is the same week. We discussed the desirability of visiting for at least a day in the spring to help you celebrate your birthday if you were amenable.

I am almost finished with Dark Side Of Camelot and am finding cumbersome to read with all the repetitive "When interviewed in 199— for this book" rather than sources footnoted. There is footnoting, but only to clarify or add to a story or point. Many of the sources seem credible, but many are a stretch. If you like, I can go back over the book and cite examples from excerpts if that helps your writing.

Stephen has finished his regular season of recreation basketball and has started tournament. This has been good for him. I've been able to take him to every game and be at every practice and he has seen it through. Good for his confidence.

My art history course is half done; we had the midterm last week. The rest we have is Renaissance. This is an undergraduate course and more challenging than the education graduate courses I have been taking normally each year.

I hope you're both doing well and getting around. Take care.

Sincerely, Dave
